Urgent Update Field Safety Notice
Chariot™ Guiding Sheath

Dear «Users_Name»,

In the previous notification sent on 27th November 2015, Boston Scientific advised that it is recalling its Chariot™ Guiding Sheath. To date, Boston Scientific has received fourteen complaints for shaft separation, four of which involved separation of the distal shaft. These events occurred during device preparation or use.

Although our records indicate you have already responded to BSC's initial field action notification, we are contacting you to provide additional guidance and request acknowledgment of this communication:

Physicians are encouraged to contact all patients who have undergone procedures involving Chariot to confirm their post-procedure status, as device shaft separation and embolized fragments may not have been recognised at the time of the procedure. To date, no permanent impairments or patient deaths have been reported.

The most severe outcome of this failure is embolism of device fragments, which could lead to obstruction of blood flow or additional intervention to remove a device fragment. Obstruction of blood flow can result in injuries such as stroke, kidney damage or damage to the intestines or limbs.

Our records indicate that your facility received some of the concerned product. Table below provides a complete list of all affected products, including Product Description, Material Number (UPN) and Lot/Batch numbers and expiry date. Please note that only the material listed below is affected. No other Boston Scientific product is involved by this Field Safety Notice.
